

IGUAZÚ, LAND OF NATURE

The Iguazu National Park is located in the Northern tip of the Argentine Province of Misiones, across the border from Brasil. It extends over 220000 acres and protects one of the natural areas of greatest biological diversity in the country: the Paranaense subtropical rain forest, a continuation of the Southern Brazilian Jungle. It has more than 2100 known plant species, among which abound pindo palms, gigantic trees, arborescent ferns, orchids and large epiphytes such as the huge bromeliads known as Caraguata (Aechmea caniculata), and tall canes (50 feet high).

The highlight of the region are the Iguazu Falls, considered by many the most beautiful and spectacular waterfalls in the world, perhaps because of the 200 streams that suddenly appear from the rainforest to form a myriad of gorgeous falls, large and small, which mingle and blend so graciously with the surrounding vegetation. For this reason they have been declared a "World Heritage Site".
